Adding to long-standing concerns that the Fed will raise interest rates more slowly than many expect, the Fed has downgraded its estimate of when the first hike in 10 years will occur. The Fed now expects the first increase to come around May of 2015, one month later than it previously indicated. It also expects the first increase to be half a percentage point, and the second and third one-quarter of a percentage point larger than previously thought. After hiking rates three times last year, the Fed has indicated
