A businessman's life is mapped out on a spreadsheet. And his paycheck, once he lands a job, is precisely divvied up. Christine Jones, on the other hand, doesn't have a spreadsheet. And she doesn't have a regular income, either. For the last five years, the IndyStar has been tracking Jones, 53, and her husband, Steve Englehart, 64, with the help of the Indiana Pension Review Commission, which helps public workers sort out their retirement benefits. Her husband is retired and gets $2,700 a month from the state. In 2016, Jones got an education award from the Indiana Commission for Adult Education. She had enrolled in an online course in computer programming. That year, she would have earned $56,000, according to the state's new pension formula. But she would have owed $211,000 in employer contributions. So if she retired today, she would have had to live on just $48,000 a year. Pensions are notoriously complicated. They vary from state to state and are difficult for taxpayers to decipher. State governments are "slaughtering the poor" because they don't pay enough into pensions, said Jennifer Rexford, program director of the National Institute for Retirement Security. "The vast majority of people just don't understand pensions," Rexford said. But Jones has managed to get a grasp of her own. "If you look at her situation, it's kind of like the old farm hand," Rexford said 09e8f5149f

Latest Version Susan Alcorn-Rosenbaum: Editor In Chief, May It Please The Court - And I've Been Cutting It Susan Alcorn-

Rosenbaum is the founding publisher and editor in chief of the O'Gorman Law Group, PLLC's print publication, Justice-Related News & Thoughts. She welcomes you to her legal news blog, where she shares her insights into the latest news, trends and developments in the law. The Editor in Chief for the new May it Please The Court blog says her goal is to help people learn about current issues in the law and how they might apply in their lives.

"As the editor in chief, I think my role is to bring to the public just enough background to make it easy for the citizenry to become familiar with court proceedings," she explained. Among other things, she said she hopes the blog will help people know what issues are important to the law and to the nation's legal system. She explains that the purpose of "May it Please the Court" is to also bring to light what may be the most important legal topics of the day: "We try to cover all of the most important and interesting legal issues, not to mention timely legal issues," she said. She says she doesn't plan to change the blog's format. The blog posts are written about topics that are important to the legal community, like how a state attorney general is trying to make his state less litigious or how a state is changing its laws regulating emails. While the blog is getting started, Susan Alcorn-Rosenbaum says she hopes to publish at least once a week. She hopes the posts will receive comments and weigh in from readers. She says one of the issues she thinks the readers may find most interesting is the legal issues surrounding driver cell phone use. "The biggest hot topic in the legal community right now seems to be the effect of cell phone use by drivers and how the courts are adjudicating these cases," she said. Her hope is that readers will come across the site and its wealth of content and follow the blog. To learn more about Susan Alcorn-Rosenbaum's career, activities and background, please
