Body mass index and laparoscopic surgery: a systematic review of the literature. The aim of this study was to systematically review the literature with regard to the relationship between body mass index (BMI) and the success of laparoscopic surgery. A literature search of Medline, Embase, and the Cochrane Library through December 2011 was performed. Studies were eligible if they reported on a laparoscopic surgical procedure in adult patients that investigated the influence of BMI on success or failure rates. Of the 3,281 articles identified, 24 were included. Ten articles reported on laparoscopic cholecystectomy, nine on laparoscopic colectomy, three on laparoscopic appendectomy, and two on laparoscopic gastrectomy. The results showed a significant relationship between increasing BMI and failure rates. Patients with a BMI ≥ 30 kg/m² had a significant increase in the risk of failure. The risk of conversion was increased in overweight patients ($>$ or $=25-29.9$ kg/m²) and obese patients ($>$ or $=30$ kg/m²). Surgical duration was prolonged in obese patients ($>$ or $=30$ kg/m²). The results of this review indicate that patients with a BMI $\geq 25-29.9$ kg/m² should be considered as possible candidates for laparoscopic surgery, but it is currently unclear whether obesity is associated with an increased risk of failure. Further large-scale studies are needed to clarify the relationship between BMI and success or failure rates of laparoscopic surgery.

Credit: Yoav Zitoun Emanuel said in a statement at the start of the union: "Our main slogan is building a haredi state with a Jewish majority, with a Jewish claim over every square meter in Israel. "We are prepared to join the state in any way, but we insist on being recognized as an official sector in the state that includes all its sectors, and there is no question of the state claiming it is the only sector or claiming that we live only on state lands. We want to be a part of the state, like other sectors, and we will not accept the state's taking away from us even a thousandth of the land." The union says it takes part in all government processes; it suggested legislation be drafted to allow it to realize all its ideas, and states its willingness to join the state in the negotiations on the division of lands with the Palestinians. The haredi union, which has the support of around 15,000 members, has also proposed settling the pre-1967 lands of Israel, such as the Negev, Galilee, the Golan Heights and the Jordan Valley.
