5th edition and "Fantasy Grounds - Wrath of River King (5E)" will be supported by a set of additional rules and adventure content. All the additional content and new features will be announced at a later date. Wrath of the River King Gameplay 5th-7th level characters play through 5 scene-driven chapters in this open-format adventure, where each chapter has a main storyline which has a set of cutscenes to progress the plot, while having an optional goal with side quests to complete that's really only optional in name, and can have epic consequences if players choose to take them. There are also tons of minigames, like taking on the role of the River King and the fey lords and ladies he has just set on a path of destruction, or dishing out silly jokes to the fey lords and ladies themselves. There are also tons of lore and just fun time to be had, with images to fill out the setting, and characters to name and give their unique personalities to. There's also secrets and Easter eggs hidden in the world and in the plot, as well as a good helping of lore for players to dig through, all to be had in this 5th-level open-format RPG adventure on how to deal with the fey courts. This self-contained 5th-level adventure has its own ton of content, from the main plot, to the side quests, minigames, and humour. There's also a vast amount of lore that can be read when players are in the world and want more info. There are images and even little touch ups and tweaks to keep the visual aspect of the adventure alive, for the players to enjoy. Players get to choose the main storyline in chapter 2, and if they get a chapter for free or download the free rules instead of paying for the full adventure, they will get to choose two of the three chapter ends that are included. The end storyline options come after chapter 3, and include a different map and character. (All the maps and endings are in the free download.) This is a perfect adventure to dip into after the main campaign, or use as a campaign for its own right, with its own set of characters, and lore and secrets. 1-5 Players +3 Hours +300 Words +15 Maps 1 of 5 Ends +Two Chapter ends +Full color and black & white +

Holy crap, this is an amazing engine. Some time ago, a developer created a tool where they're actually able to monetize their games, using in-game transactions. It was a really good idea, and here, you can purchase in-game items for your creations in-game. It was really important for us to do this tool, because it allows us to expand our community in a way where we can give them the possibility of trading games that they've created, using in-game currency. Let's take a look at how we're doing it. How do they work? Each in-game item is referred to as a parcel. Items are referred to as parcels and prices are called capitals. Every item has the complete information of the parcel and can be created for any game. For a non-commercial person, which is a developer in the community, if you use the engine to create any game you want, it doesn't matter, since all the packages that you can create are available to use through this tool. How do I own a parcel? The concept of ownership is a new concept in a game such as Minecraft, which most likely will not be applicable to the traditional economic system where people own things through salaries. The concept of ownership is in this case, when you're currently creating a new game, it's owned by you, which will be able to create as many copies as you want, as long as you're able to create them. But, if you want to create a game on your own, this parcel will be owned by you through the tools. How are they priced? The price of each item is calculated based on the quantity that you want to purchase. You can choose to either look for a parcel that is currently available for sale or make your own, in which case you're able to choose the quantity and price. Currently, the price range for parcels available on the platform is between 100k to 1M currency per parcel. Example: You purchase a parcel for 100k, which is the current highest that you can purchase, which is 100,000th currency. How do I get a parcel? Log in to the platform using your developer account, and look for any available parcels that you can purchase. Choose one of them and click the buy button, and it will be sent to your
