U.S. Stripe Operation Is Funded by Private Contributions, ProPublica found posted by Chuck Sudo @ 9:45 pm (SAN FRANCISCO) - Private donations account for the majority of a U.S. government money-laundering operation, a new investigation by ProPublica and WNYC-NYC Public Radio has found. ProPublica and WNYC reported Thursday that donors to the government-funded program include foreign governments, individuals with close ties to the U.S. government and business leaders who oppose the government's anti-money-laundering efforts. Publicly-funded agencies such as the Treasury Department and the Department of Homeland Security then distribute the cash to local police, who partner with banks and legal services to launder the funds. The government program, called the Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering, has contributed more than $500 million for drug-fighting efforts since its creation in 1999. The source of the government's funding was not made clear in the ProPublica and WNYC article. An administration official, however, said in an e-mail to the New York Times that the total "is higher than $500 million," but it "would be inaccurate to suggest it is sourced from localities." ProPublica and WNYC reported that similar programs in Canada and Mexico, both funded by the U.S. federal government, were largely funded through donations from nongovernmental organizations such as the Ford Foundation and corporate foundations. "To our knowledge, the task force has never received a dollar of federal funding," said ProPublica's Scott Shane. "It did, however, from 2002 until 2007, receive tens of millions of dollars in donations from a variety of foundations." ProPublica told WNYC and The Times that it had identified no active recipients of its investigation, but that it did receive information from "individuals in the U.S. and abroad" who said they had helped funnel money to police departments through the program. When money-laundering operations are revealed, critics say, the methods used to hide them should be revealed as well. Last year, ProPublica published "The Lost Bracket," which traced a $50 million fundraising campaign by Chevron, a multibillion-dollar company, to police

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an attaching device for attaching a reinforcing metal plate to a body by projecting a decorative material such as a letter or ornamental plate on the surface of the reinforcing metal plate by heating the reinforcing metal plate and the decorative material by radio frequency (RF) heating or microwave heating. 2. Description of the Prior Art Conventionally, an attaching device for attaching a reinforcing metal plate to a vehicle body by projecting a decorative material such as a letter or ornamental plate on the surface of the reinforcing metal plate by heating the reinforcing metal plate and the decorative material by radio frequency (RF) heating or microwave heating is disclosed in Japanese Patent Publication No. 57-51755. In the conventional attaching device, in order to heat the reinforcing metal plate and the decorative material with RF heating or microwave heating, a projecting portion for forming a space for inserting a base plate thereinto and a heating electric field for heating an inserted portion of the base plate are formed on the projection mold. The reinforcing metal plate to be attached to the vehicle body is molded so as to have the shape of a flat plate in a fashion that the plate-like molded product of a metal material such as stainless steel or aluminum is punched into a desired plate shape and the plate-like molded product is jointed by welding. The base plate of the mold is attached to the reinforcing metal plate by pressing the base plate against the reinforcing metal plate. Thereby, the heating electric field is generated in the joint portion between the reinforcing metal plate and the base plate in a fashion that the base plate and the heating electric field are opposed to each other. In the conventional attaching device, since the reinforcing metal plate and the decorative material are attached to the reinforcing metal plate respectively, it is difficult to form a partial ornament in the decorative material on the surface of the reinforcing metal plate. Namely, although the reinforcing metal plate is punched into a desired plate shape, the ornamental shape is fixed and the ornamental shape is inevitably attached to the reinforcing metal plate, the ornamental shape can not be attached partially on the reinforcing metal plate. In order to make the decorative material attached to the reinforcing metal plate partially ornamental, it is necessary to punch the decorative material into a sheet form and punch out a desired plate shape of the sheet-like portion from the sheet-like punched product. The decorative material can not be attached to the reinforcing metal plate by punching due to the fact that the decorative material is soft and
