Shortly before his death, Morton's father, who had been serving as a missionary in India for more than three decades, requested that his son dedicate the book to him. Morton's dedication reads: "To my father, Rev. Wilbur D. Morton Sr., missionary in India, who so well understood the unreasoning faith of childhood, with love, A.D. 1955.” “The dedication is both exciting and heart-wrenching,” Yoder said. “Morton writes of his father, but he also writes about how disappointed he was with his own father as a man and how much he wishes he could have shown him more tenderness and love. It’s a difficult, unique letter to read.” Although Morton dedicated the book to his father, who died in 1960, he reserved the final chapters for Morton himself. He shows himself trying to come to terms with his legacy in his own mind as he approaches the end. “My work is still not done,” Morton writes in his closing. “I am still often haunted by my past. I still often despair of my memory, and I still often search for the deeper things of life.” Although it’s his last book, his faith and his memories of his parents lives on. Morton’s dedication reads, “Munich II: To my mother, Rev. Dorothy C. Morton, missionary in India, who so well understood the unreasoning faith of childhood.” “I believe he dedicated it to his mother,” Yoder said. “I know he was closer to his mother than his father.” Morton grew up in rural Pennsylvania and New York. He served in World War II as an artillery bombardier and pilot in the United States Army Air Corps. In 1949, he arrived in Munich where he would live out the rest of his life. Although he initially wanted to be a priest, he eventually started writing and became a prolific author in many

Q: Stepper motor details needed I was recently asked to find a cheap unit for a customer who does not want to spend any money. Any design with low current and high torque specifications on the motors (anything from up to a few amps @ 1/8th or 1/4th of a HP) would be appreciated. A: Thinking about the level of torque you are talking about, I'm guessing you're looking for stepper motors? Steppers are like a motor except they don't turn, they push. Maxon makes stepper motors. There are 2 versions with different numbers of steps per revolution: Bipolar (around 2200 RPM) and unipolar (around 3300 RPM). The unipolar motor is also known as a 'leadscrew', so you should check to see if it is that or a stepper before deciding on one. I think the bipolar versions are cheaper, but I don't know about speed. You can find plenty of reviews and pages with specs and such on Amazon by searching 'stepper motor' and then 'reviews'. The ones on Amazon are usually fairly technical, but some of the reviews are pretty readable. A good low-cost alternative would be an 'advance leadscrew', which are a couple of thin, flexible copper bands around the shaft. You can then use the helical gearing to get the torque and speed you desire from them. If you need really cheap, you could consider a mass driver from one of the many surplus supply websites. This is basically an air-powered lathe. It's a lot of fun to use. A portable mass driver and some good bottles of helium are all you need. The part you would purchase is a gas- or oil-powered air compressor. There are even compressed air welding guns that convert a high-pressure air cylinder into low-pressure air for your use. (And there's a DIY version of that as well.) 's only food throughout the day. The team also spend a lot of time talking about sports, because I wanted to learn what he was thinking, especially about the NBA and boxing, because I know those two things. I'm also not from the UK, but we have a lot of common things. We're both baseball fans, we both like hockey, we both have friends that are scientists, we're both believers in ast
